FUND MANAGER COMMENTARY

The managers have a more positive short-term outlook as softer inflation and seasonality support a risk rally into the end of the year, but medium-term concerns remain. They maintain a preference for high quality duration assets, which are likely to do well in case of a cyclical recession and offer attractive yield and upside potential. Within Defensive assets, the managers trimmed the exposure to long-dated Treasuries and added to the front end of the curve. Within Yield assets, they took some profits on South African bonds as the latest inflation data was not supportive. Within Growth assets, the managers added to Japanese financials as valuations are still attractive and the country is on a structurally improving trajectory via corporate reforms. The managers also took advantage of a decline in share prices of energy stocks to raise the exposure to the sector. They also added to Chinese value.
