FUND MANAGER COMMENTARY

In October 2024, the performance of the IDR Ultimate Equity Fund was positively impacted by our overweight positions in select crude palm oil (CPO) and retail companies. CPO emerged as the top-performing commodity year-to-date with a remarkable rise of +36%, driven by La Niña weather patterns which resulted in heavier than anticipated rainfall and poor harvests. We remain committed to our strategy, using these investments as proxies for the active, fast-fashion lifestyle trend, targeting mid-to-high-income consumers with stronger purchasing power. Conversely, we've reduced our allocation in the telecommunications sector due to a slower growth outlook amid weak purchasing power and increasing competition from telecom peers. In contrast, certain positions detracted from the fund's performance in September, particularly our overweight in select consumer staples, healthcare, and energy sectors, alongside an underweight in property. The consumer sector underperformed as margins in the third quarter of 2024 were weaker than expected, primarily due to rising raw material costs.
